Chinese Face Reading - Part two

The Year of the Metal Tiger is starting to wane and give way to The Year of the Metal Rabbit. Both animals are inherently wood energy; but the tiger is yang wood energy - strong and solid, while the rabbit is yin wood - more fragile and flexible. When these wood energies are combined with the metal elements present in both 2010 and 2011, it usually brings militancy. There is a big difference between a yang metal, yang wood tiger warrior and a yin metal, yin wood rabbit warrior! This tiger energy is very aggressive and upfront, while this rabbit energy hides conflict, disharmony, tension and deceit under a peaceful surface. Think passive - aggressive! It also favors youth and the uncovering of secret agendas. We can certainly see those forces starting to emerge with the release of Wikileaks and the new "hacktivists" response!! In the next newsletter, we will look at the shifting energies of 2011, which begin on February 3rd.

In this newsletter, we are continuing to look into some aspects of Chinese Face reading. Your face is not just your appearance; it reveals what you are, what you have been and what you will be. The secret, precious information written on your face has been studied and recorded not only by the Chinese, but by other cultures around the world such as ancient Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. The Chinese, however, codified the most complete compilation of knowledge on the subject.

With the current craze for facial piercings among the youth, I decided to give a brief overview of what the Chinese predicted would happen if one purposely created "holes" in their face or ears! Each area of the face and ears corresponds to different organs and therefore any piercings can affect your physical, emotional and/or mental health.

The nose governs the fate of your middle age and is the location where the "wealth" palace is located. By putting a "hole" in the nose (your safety deposit box), it is predicted that your money will drain away, especially in middle age.

The Eyebrows govern your relationship with your siblings and your fate during your thirties. Putting a hole here, when you are a teenager, can negatively affect your relationship with your brothers and sisters at a future point. Physically, piercing here can affect the health of your bladder.

The tongue rules desire and how we express ourselves. Making a hole here can create unbalanced, unwholesome desires and problems with communication. The stomach can also be negatively impacted.

The ears represent an “inverted fetus” which contains a complete map of the body with the ear lobes being the head. The center of the earlobe rules the eyes and worldwide this is the most common spot for earrings. There is no cartilage and the Chinese thought that putting gold earrings here would promote good eyesight, since it would affect that part of the brain relating to the sight. Interestingly, many other cultures also thought the same thing. Mediterranean sailors said that they wore gold earrings to strengthen their vision!

Piercing the outside of the ear with rings (where there is cartilage) can damage the spine and piercing the outer top of the ears can hurt the legs.

Clearly, making holes anywhere but the earlobe is not looked upon favorably. Botox, plastic surgery and other procedures also bring unexpected consequences!

Wishing you a wonderful Holiday Season!
