Happy New Year 2010!

Year of the Metal Wood Tiger

On February 14th, the year of the "Metal Wood Tiger" begins. Tiger years are traditionally associated with massive changes and social upheaval. In a yang metal year like 2010, metal and wood are in a destructive cycle (metal cuts wood) and this usually results in conflicts, clashes and fighting. Also, hidden deeply inside of the Tiger is a powerful fire energy which historically has been related to both atomic and nuclear energy.

Since the Chinese calendar revolves in a 60 year cycle, the last time we saw a similar energetic combination was in 1950. That year was the beginning of the Korean War, the nuclear arms race between the USSR and the US and the McCarthy era. Maybe that's why 1950 also birthed television and tranquilizer drugs!

The metal tiger energies bring forth leadership, a strong sense of justice, brotherhood and loyalty to friends. It is important this year to see that these powerful energies don't dissolve into global destruction through misplaced military and religious alliances but are used for the good of humanity.

Since chance and unpredictability are predicted for the year, one must remain flexible and focused to thrive. In the year of the metal Tiger, it is vital to remember what is really important.

On Feb. 14th, it is the Chinese custom to open any doors or windows in the northeast direction to welcome the new year energies of the tiger into your home.

In Feng Shui, there are thirteen days every year (based on the lunar calendar) where one is advised to not do anything important!! They have the unfortunate title of "Master Killing Days." On these days, one should avoid moving to a new location, trading, receiving payments, starting a new job, getting married, getting buried, signing important documents etc.
